The ministering imps of the Press were credited with an informal origin at a very early stage in he history of printing. According to the absurd old story, which still crops up occasionally, Johann Fust, of Mentz, one of the earliest German printers, was the origina of Dr Faustus in the legend immortalised by Goothe. Fust kept his knowledge of the art of printing secret; but when peoplefound him offering books at a price for below the usual cost of manuscripts, and supplying copies with miraculous rapidity, they at once came to the conflusion that such wonders could only be wought by diabolical agency. and to give lead colour to the auggestion they pointed to the boys who ran his errands, and who, like their successors, were liberally blacked, and called them his devils. The upshot of the matter was that the printer, to save his life, was obliged to reveal the new process, and so, of course, lose his chance of exclusive. profit. It is not mry probable, however, that this comical history of Johann Fust of Dr. Faustus. To another of the early printers is sometimes adjudged the honour of originating the "devil." The famous Aldus Manutius, the founder of the great Venetian printing house, is said to have employed a black slave who was thought by the ignorant to be an imp; so Aldus issued the following proclamation, which by the way, is probably spocryphal: "I, Aldus Manutius, printer to the Dogo, have by this made public exposure of the printer's devil. All who think he is flot flesh and blood may come and pinch him "-an offer doubtless much appreciated by the unlucky black. But apart from these somewhat mythicalorigins, the name of printer's devil, derived from the blackness engendered by the 816 existence at an early period in the history of the Press. A seventeenth century writer, Randle Holme, in his "Academy of Armory," gives explanations of a large number of the terms and instruments that were then in use in various arts and trades, | and his notices of printers' terms are particularly full. He does not forget the attendant imps of the press, for these boys, he remarks; "do in a printing house commonly black and bedaub themselves, whence the workmen do jocosely call them devils, and sometimes spirits, and sometimes lies." Foote, in his farce of "The Author," speaks of "printer's prime minister, called sheets from the tympan of the press, but the title is now enjoyed by the errand boys of printers' establishments. Punch once defined an author's paradise as a "place where there are no printers' devils," since it is the "devil" who vexes the souls of luckless writers behindhand with their copy" and who prry the proofs to and

A hundred year ago it seems to have been not uncommo for female "devils" to attend the press In Boswell's "John. son there is a rect of a conversation in the presence of thepeter and Sir Joshua Reynolds, when certain respectable author was spoken as having married a "printer's devil." A printer's devil. sir !" cried Sir Jos "Why, I thought. a printer's devil warresture with a black face and in mgs." Yes, sir," replied Johnson ; " but I he he had her face ! washed and put clejothes on her."

THE POINTED BULLET.

After considerable delay the extended trials of the new pointed bullet are to be entered upon this summer. The subject has been under discussion for six years and, despite demonstrations at Bisley and Hythe, the use of this modern form of bullet has been kept in the experimental stage for a far longer time than in other countries. It appears to be now realised that the Lee-Enfield bullet at present in use places us in an interior position.

The chief value of the pointed bullet lies in its flatter trajectory, which gives pointblank aim at a greater distance; thus the danger space is vaitly increased. Moreover the speed and stopping power of the pointed type are much greater than those of the Lee-Enfield. Lastly, in the matter of accuracy, the Americans have proved, in competition with our riflemen, that their new ammunition turns the balance of contests every time against the users of the old bullet.
